The Debate on the Best School Start Time

On Monday, the American Academy of Pediatrics released a policy statement recommending that middle and high schools delay the start of class until after 8:30 a.m. About 40 percent of high schools in the country start earlier than 8 a.m., a phenomenon that has negative effects on teens' safety, well-being and education, according to Dr. Judith Owens, the director of sleep medicine at Children's National Medical Center in Washington D.C.

Adolescents are currently severely sleep-deprived, notes the report, with 87 percent of high school students getting less than the recommended amount of 8.5 to 9.5 hours per night. The reasons for this are varied. For biological reasons, THIS can be difficult for teens to fall asleep before 11 p.m. Beyond that, lifestyle factors such as homework and extracurricular activities also tend to keep adolescents awake.

"We really feel that this is such a compelling health problem that it really is in the best interest of students for schools to take this step," said Owens, the report's lead author. "We're hoping the more we educate school districts and various stakeholders, the more schools will actually implement this on a practical basis."

Research shows that SLEEP DEPRIVATION negatively affects students' grades. A 2012 study found that middle school students who started class an hour later than usual saw their standardized test scores increase over 2 percentile points in math on average. "The score changes are comparable to other differences we might see: The effects of starting school one hour later are similar to the increasing grades we see when kids' parents have Master's or PhD's," researcher Finley Edwards told HuffPost at the time. Sleep-deprived teens also have higher self-reported rates of depression, higher rates of obesity and lower rates of school attendance. "When you delay school start times, all these factors improve: less self-reported depression, fewer driving accidents, better grades, better test scores, better attendance," Owens said. The nation's top education official agrees with Owens' assessment. In 2013, Education Secretary Arne Duncan said that while schools are free to set their own start times, it's worth considering a delay.

"There's lots of research and common sense that lots of teens struggle to get up ... to get on the bus," Duncan said last year in a broadcast interview. But, as an Associated Press article pointed out at the time, changing school start times isn't easy and can have unintended consequences. "If you're starting the high school kids later, you're starting elementary kids earlier. No one wants those kids out on the streets when it's dark," Patte Barth, director for the Center for Public Education at the National School Boards Association told the outlet. "If they're contemplating this switch, they need to look at the costs."

41. Who does NOT support the idea of starting school too early?

- a) the editor of Huffpost magazine
- b) the director for the Center for Public Education
- c) American Academy of Pediatrics
- d) The majority of adolescents ?

42. What is the genre of the text?

New Use

A) Many university professors have tended to forbid students from using the source because of it. But not all of them!

B) Wikipedia is an online encyclopedia that is being written by its users. Anyone with an Internet connection can add new entries or edit existing ones, and there are currently more than ten million articles in over 253 languages. But because anyone can make changes to the content, inaccuracies and poorly supported information often appears. It's an issue of great concern to the encyclopedia.

C) At the University of British Columbia Jon Beasley-Murray made an interesting experiment - he permitted his students to write entries for the Wikipedia instead of the usual term paper assignment.

D) In order to improve the quality of the content, Wikipedia has even begun to publish featured articles. They provide thorough, well-written coverage of their content, supported by many peerreviewed publications. Well, even this move appeared to be not enough (of all the entries at Wikipedia, only about 2,000 have been designated for this top rank) and the source is still not very trustworthy.

E) The majority said it was daunting to work online, where anyone could watch. Some even found the assignment more exciting and meaningful than a term paper, which often gets filed away once the semester ends. Three entries even received featured article status. Only a few students had their work instantly deleted by other users because it probably wasn't good enough. Overall, though, most agreed that it was a great learning experience.
